A cross-sectional study involves looking at data from a population at one specific point in time. The participants in this type of study are selected based on particular variables of interest. Cross-sectional studies are often used in developmental psychology , but this method is also used in many other areas, including social science and education.

~~The Definition and Use of a Cross Sectional Study~~

Cross-sectional studies are also susceptible to prevalence-incidence bias (see the Threats to Validity and Reliability section), which can cause the association between potentially significant risk factors and a disease to be underestimated. Despite these epistemological and analytical shortcomings, cross-sectional studies provide an expedient means to generate hypotheses which can be ...
