Advice for employers on workplace adjustments for mental ...

Adjustment disorder is a mental health condition that develops as a result of having to adjust to a particular source of stress, or a traumatic experience. While everyone reacts differently to emotionally traumatic events, if you find that you are experiencing an extreme and overwhelming reaction in relation to the event, it may be that you have developed adjustment disorder.

Many people with a mental health problem have a legal right to ask an employer for changes to be made to their jobs and workplaces in order for them to apply for or do their job. This guide sets out exactly what a reasonable adjustment is, and has examples from people with experience of a mental health problem and what adjustments were made for them.

Stress is the body's reaction to any change that requires an adjustment or response. The body reacts to these changes with physical, mental, and emotional responses. Stress is a normal part of life. You can experience stress from your environment, your body, and your thoughts.
