

From Anxiety To Meltdown How Individuals On The Autism Spectrum Deal With Anxiety Experience Meltdowns Manifest Tantrums And How You Can Intervene Effectively

~~What Are the Symptoms of a Nervous Breakdown?~~

Anxiety can be a masterful imposter. In children, it can sway away from the more typical avoidant, clingy behaviour and show itself as tantrums, meltdowns and aggression. As if anxiety wasn't hard enough to deal with! When children are under the influence of an anxious brain, their behaviour has nothing to do with wanting to push against the limits. They are often great kids who don't want ...

Anxiety is a normal, human feeling of fear or panic. When we face stressful situations, it can set off our brain's in-built alarm bell system, which tells us something isn't right and that we need to deal with it. Our brain wants the difficult situation to go away, so it makes us feel more alert, stops us thinking about other things, and even pumps more blood to our legs to help us run ...

When I can neither flee nor quiet the alarm sounding in my mind, panic sets in and a meltdown occurs. The artificial calm demeanor I have created begins to collapse and it feels like the floor has dropped from beneath me. I feel as if I'm tumbling down a never-ending hole with nothing to grab onto, no way to prevent myself from falling apart.

Anticipating a meltdown Many autistic people will show signs of distress before having a meltdown, which is sometimes referred to as the "rumble stage". They may start to exhibit signs of anxiety such as pacing, seek reassurance through repetitive questioning or physical signs such as rocking or becoming very still.

~~Meltdowns — a guide for all audiences~~

What causes a meltdown? A meltdown is caused by a feeling of being overwhelmed, acute anxiety and a sense of loss of control - it is most helpful to understand meltdowns as panic attacks, an external expression of an internal state, rather than as a

'behaviour' or choice or wilful defiance.
