Lizabeth Cohen "Making a New Deal: Industrial Workers in Chicago 1919-1939" Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990, 544 pages. Cohen's book, which began as her dissertation and is written as such, aims to explain how industrial workers who were powerless in the 1910's became politically active by the 1930's and what that involvement meant to them and to national politics.

Making a New Deal by Lizabeth Cohen - Cambridge Core

In 1919, four million workers launched the greatest strike wave in American history. Boston policemen, New England telephone operators, textile workers up and down the East Coast, most of the workingmen and women in Seattle, 450,000 coal miners, and 365,000 steelworkers nationwide led an offensive in which more than one in five American workers eventually participated.

Lizabeth Cohen has attempted nothing less than a major reinterpretation of how industrial workers became deeply involved with the union organizing drives of the 1930s. Rather than focusing on external stimuli such as governmental actions, Cohen explores in great detail the ways in which changes in working people's own attitudes allowed them to be participants in, indeed makers of, their New Deal.
