James Kelley presents classic malpractice cases with good and bad outcomes for the patient: prescription for the wrong medication, release of patients who were still acutely ill, violence by a patient against another person, and unusual disputes about the standard of psychiatric care.

~~Psychiatric Malpractice: Stories of Patients ...~~

Kelley reports in depth on cases dealing with four common types of psychiatric malpractice cases: a patient's suicide, a patient's violence against others, a psychotherapist's sexual misconduct, and the use of unconventional treatments.

~~Psychiatric Malpractice: Stories of Patients ...~~

Psychiatric malpractice is a specific type of medical malpractice that takes place during psychiatric treatment. For a patient to accuse a psychiatrist of this kind of wrongdoing, he must show he was directly harmed as a result of the practitioner's negligence. While many patients complain of mental or emotional harm caused by psychiatrists, some also are physically hurt, so the types of cases tend to vary.
