The Waking Dream is my favortie photography book, not just because of the pictures, but because of the writing. The authors take you through photography's first 100 years, how it all began as a replacement for commissioned artists into an art form all its own. Amazing reading, amazing book, amazing photography.

Dream Photography is a celebration of life and living. Capturing the world in black and white one day at a time, one smile at a time, one moment at a time. From tiny lady bugs to vast, sprawling landscapes. From the stubble on a lover's chin to a lone hiker almost swallowed by the forest. All is celebrated.

Sir John Herschel (1792–1871) was Victorian England's preeminent scientist, astronomer, and mathematician, considered the equal of Sir Isaac Newton. Cameron met him in 1836 in Capetown, South Africa, where she was recuperating from illness and he was charting the stars of the southern hemisphere and recording the native flora.
